

My name is Sid Summers, the current Deputy Head Boy at JRCS.

Upon hearing the role of deputy head boy was bestowed to me, I was elated. Having the opportunity to bridge the gap between students and teachers is a task I have always tried to undertake to ensure a healthy working environment. Whilst confidence is something that has always come naturally to me, being deputy head boy is now allowing myself and my fellow Heads and Deputy Head to pass on that confidence to my fellow peers, something that means a great deal to me.

During my time at Jo Richardson I've managed to gain experiences, opportunities and achievements that I could have only hoped for in life. For the last 4 years, I have played an integral part in Student Voice, something that has pushed me beyond my comfort zone and helped me discover my character through the friendships and opportunities it has presented me with. As the leader of the Interview Team I have been privileged to have a say over new staff appointments and I have seen the value of getting the students voice hear. As teaching and learning lead for KS3 students I have been involved in school productions and bi-annual music concerts, which has allowed me to be the confident, outgoing performer I like to think I am. As Form Representative I have had numerous opportunities, to meet and discuss points for improvement around school and I have been part of a team who have executed change. I am extremely grateful for all of these opportunities and aim to encourage and support younger students as they find their place within the school.

Whilst all of these extra-curricular activities have helped shaped me, academically JRCS has helped me blossom and thrive in my studies, something I intend to take with me into the upcoming difficult year.

I am beyond excited to see what this year brings as Deputy Head Boy and cannot wait to be a role model for the students as JRCS.
